

Reward and Recognition

This page outlines the Best Practice for volunteer reward and recognition.

Volunteering Local Guidance

Best practice, as outlined in the GLV's London Volunteer Management Charter, is below.

Basic Practice	Good Practice	Best Practice
Appreciation expressed informally	References provided	Formal recognition ceremonies

Our scheme

Volunteering Local operates its own reward and recognition scheme. This is so that we can:

- 'Reward and Recognise' volunteers for their exceptional contribution to their organisation
- 'Reward and Recognise' volunteer involving organisations
- Help encourage a culture of shared success and commitment.
- Recognise that each volunteer and volunteer-involving organisation can make a difference
- Highlight processes, procedures and activities that have benefited volunteers and volunteer-involving organisations and showcase them as best working practices

Volunteering Local can recognise the contribution of volunteers by providing certificates for:

- a particular number of hours voluntary service e.g. 25, 50 or 100
- completing a project / supporting an event / attending a training course
- leaving an organisation to be recognised for their contribution
- a general certificate for a volunteer you particularly want to recognise

These are sent to the organisation to present to the volunteer.
